Day in the life of a GP...

Find out about our interactive workshops and how they can help you in your day-to-day work as a GP

Working with doctors Working for patients

General Medical Council

Every day you face making decisions within a challenging and dynamic working environment. Changes to the role of GPs, revised legislation and new technologies all impact on your work.

We want to support you in giving safe and ethical care. Our Regional Liaison Service (RLS) works with doctors through free interactive workshops that show how GMC guidance can be used practically and support good decision-making.

Professional ethics in practice

The RLS offers a range of sessions from one-hour to full-day events, which can be tailored to any group of doctors no matter how experienced.

The Day in the life of a GP full-day workshop is our most popular course for primary care and features in many GP vocational training scheme programmes. The session has also been adapted for experienced GPs, trainers and partners.

In the session, our facilitators work through interactive scenarios on the issues regularly faced by GPs.

Popular topics are:

- GMC complaints – trends and themes for GPs
- consent, including the impact of the Montgomery case on primary care
- confidentiality – covering adult safeguarding, female genital mutilation and PREVENT- what should be shared and when?
- doctors' use of social media
- end of life care, including advance care planning and DNACPR
- intimate examinations and chaperones – when to use them and what's required
- personal beliefs
- prescribing issues
- professional boundaries
- raising concerns about patient safety – how do I do it and how am I protected?

The workshop offers attendees the space and time to discuss professional dilemmas and challenges with their colleagues and the GMC.

What doctors say about our session?

The RLS has worked with over 100,000 doctors, patients, medical students and members of the public since 2012.

In 2016, 97% of doctors rated our sessions as 'good' or 'very good', and 80% said that they would change their practice as a result of attending one of our workshops.
